

Tom
Fine Art Canvas Prints
Gilleon

Known for his luminescent colors, authentic portrayals of Native Americans, and iconic landscapes of the American West, Tom Gilleon is one of the most revered masters in the Contemporary Western art movement. His sophisticated approach has been described as “magical elegance” by noted writer Patrick Hemingway and compared to the work of Modernist pioneers Edward Hopper and Mark Rothko.

His rhapsodic digital paintings with creative tech pioneer Marshall Monroe look like oil paintings but magically morph before viewers eyes. The works have been embraced by private collectors and major Modern art museums alike, with upcoming exhibits now being curated.

As a Walt Disney Imagineer for 25 years, Gilleon worked alongside Disney art legend Herb Ryman and dozens of other world-class artists, architects, and set designers to invent the concepts that became EPCOT Center and Disneyland Paris, Tokyo, Hong Kong, and Shanghai theme parks. In the early 1980s, Gilleon moved to Montana and began his career as a fine art painter.

In January 2024, Western Spirit: Scottsdale’s Museum of the West debuted Gilleon’s triumphant 90-painting career retrospective, Inner Light: The Art of Tom Gilleon. The exhibition begins in the 1940s with memories of 5-year-old Tom drawing with a stick in the sand outside the Florida home where he was raised by his Scottish-immigrant grandfather and Cherokee grandmother. It then follows his development through art studies to illustrating for NASA’s Apollo moon missions, to painting theme park concepts for Walt Disney Imagineering and creating fine art today on his Montana ranch.

Gilleon’s works are held in the permanent collections of the Whitney Western Art Museum in Wyoming; the National Cowboy & Western Heritage Museum in Oklahoma; the C.M. Russell Museum in Montana; the Booth Western Art Museum in Georgia; the Chicago Museum of Science and Industry; The Walt Disney Company; Universal Studios; Warner Bros. Studios; the United States Air Force, and NASA.

Fine Art Canvas Prints

When we show collectors our Tom Gilleon canvas prints, they think they're his original oil paintings. Not only does our canvas texture look like Tom's layering of paints, but we've matched his colors and brightness perfectly to his original paintings.

Each print is offered in various sizes and prices – each in a Limited Edition of 50 – and arrives with its Certificate of Authenticity signed and numbered by Tom Gilleon. Please allow three weeks for delivery. We don't frame prints as we believe you and your favorite frame shop can better design frames to match your personal aesthetic and home décor. But we do offer a very special alternative – Gilleon Designed Brass Medallions – to mount on the sides of your stretched prints. This is how Tom exhibits his original oil paintings in his museum exhibits.

Stretched

All prints 36 x 36 inches and smaller arrive stretched and ready to hang! You have the option to order your print mounted with Gilleon Medallions for $250 more.

Telling Stories

Tom Gilleon
Artist, Cascade, Montana

As a five-year-old growing up in my grandparents' little house in Starke, Florida, I would sit at our table at night by kerosene lamp while my grandpa told me stories. When he talked, he drew pictures of his enthralling tales of ships and whales and his own childhood back in Scotland. We didn't have many picture books. I thought this was what every family did. My grandma, who was Cherokee, taught me self-reliance and resourcefulness, making the most of what I had, which expressed itself early on when I drew my own pictures using a stick in the white sand of our front yard.

Art became my own special way to tell a story. I studied it for a time in college, and then off and on for four years at the Art Students League of Brevard, founded by Elliot McMurrough, a former chief instructor at Sarasota's Ringling School of Art and Design. The skills I honed eventually led to illustration assignments for clients including Pan Am and NASA before I landed first with Disney and then Walt Disney Imagineering, where working alongside legendary artists proved the best education of all.

Now, these past three decades, I've been painting my own visions of the West from my ranch in Montana, on land where Charlie Russell wintered his horse in the same barn where I now keep mine. Looking back at everything I've created, it's been a great ride so far – and I'm still looking forward to the next stories I get to share through my art.

Immediately Recognizable

Tim Peterson, Museum Trustee and "Inner Light" Co-curator,
Western Spirit: Scottsdale's Museum of the West

Immediately Recognizable. One of the defining elements of any great artist is that you can stand 20, 50, or 100 feet away from one of their paintings and immediately know who painted it. You can tell when it's a Frederic Remington, or a Charlie Russell, or a Howard Terpning. Tom Gilleon is one of those greats. People will always be able to look at his work and say, "That's a Tom Gilleon."

He has always been an innovator. From illustrating for NASA to working at Walt Disney Imagineering to creating fine art oil paintings of the West to now being at the forefront of digital art, Tom's career has spanned so many interesting phases that I felt it would draw a unique, broad audience. That's why I first talked to Tom almost seven years ago about putting on this major retrospective.

Beyond his artwork, though, one thing about Tom that isn't talked about much is that he is just incredibly nice. He genuinely appreciates the people around him who have helped his career, whether it's collectors; the Disney greats he worked alongside; the galleries that helped him build his fine art career; Marshall Monroe, his brilliant digital art collaborator; or Richard King, Tom's exclusive agent and co-curator for this exhibition. Tom is a good man, with a good heart, and everyone who has worked with him feels honored to help share his work with the public.

The Illuminator

Bob Weis, Former President,
Walt Disney Imagineering

In his years with Walt Disney Imagineering, Tom Gilleon was not only the finest person with whom you could have a collaborative conversation, but he also had the ability to create this moment of illuminant tension that made our concepts come off the pages with emotion and spiritual energy. He was always a wonderful collaborator, always modest, describing himself as a protégé of Herb Ryman, who had worked directly with Walt Disney and was one of the people without whom many of the early Disney projects would not have happened.

Tom had the genius to encapsulate in one image the entirety of an imagined world. Working with brush or pencil on paper, he could distill everything we'd been talking about over a two- or three-year period, to capture everyone's imagination and – humbly, quietly, and collaboratively – make the difference between whether or not a project would move forward. Tom never compromised the quality of his work. And I don't think he ever had any sense of ego about it.

He was also incredibly generous with his abilities and his time. Tom used to hold workshops up at his ranch in Montana for the other Disney artists. And he taught them about his approach to storytelling and how he created such luminance in his paintings. He was never guarded about it, and always an incredible mentor.

An Artist Who Inspires

Tom Petrie, Board Member & Former Chairman
C.M. Russell Museum, Great Falls, Montana

What do we look for in a great artist? We look for positive individuality and the ability to engage us. The most successful artists have also developed a high degree of professionalism in their technique, coupled with a sensitivity to their environment. They make us think more broadly about the world we live in. For their art to have enduring value, it also must have sufficient scope to engage a broad spectrum of humanity.

Charlie Russell had that quality. When we look at the approximately 4,000 drawings, paintings, and sculptures he created, we can appreciate the stories that Charlie had to tell about the West, because they continue to inspire people to think about their own human values.

Tom Gilleon's art also achieves that goal. I first became aware of him through the Russell Museum and was drawn to him because he was willing to experiment and develop a style all his own. Tom has the ability to think about his art on multiple levels and tell a story through it. For example, he is pushing the envelope with his digital paintings, which bring a level of subtle authority to his subjects, compressing time and causing people to become ever more sensitive to the wonder of nature and the West. Charlie Russell, who was curious to the day he died, would have been absolutely fascinated and engaged by that.

Elegance and Spirit

Seth Hopkins, Executive Director
Booth Western Art Museum, Cartersville, Georgia

I first discovered Tom Gilleon's work more than two decades ago when I was walking down the street in Jackson Hole, Wyoming, and spied one of his paintings in the window of Altamira Fine Art. It just glowed. I stumbled into the gallery and said, "I don't think I've ever seen this artist before, but I like what he's doing." Since then, Tom has become a very important person in my life, in the Booth Western Art Museum (where we gave him a solo show in 2012), and in the contemporary Western art world.

As early as 1980, you could read predictions that contemporary Western art was eventually going to be as big as or even bigger than traditional Western art. Slowly, that has been happening, in part through younger collectors who say they're not going to collect their grandfathers' and fathers' Western art. And Tom is among the artists who have helped it make great leaps forward as one of the leading contemporary Western artists of our time.

Tom has achieved that reputation in such an elegant, powerful way. Of course, his success has drawn imitators; but they can't do it with the same power or spirit. And Tom doesn't worry about it. He just keeps painting – and innovating, and challenging himself at every turn to break out of the box – and lets the chips fall where they may. And the old guard and new younger collectors alike agree that his work is exciting, and they want to own it.

The Innovator

Marshall Monroe, Digital Painting Collaborator
Marshall Monroe Magic, Corrales, New Mexico

Tom Gilleon and I first met around 1986 at Walt Disney Imagineering, while I was working on the technologies for Splash Mountain, Captain EO, and Star Tours at Disneyland. Tom was busy painting concept images for the upcoming Disney-MGM Studio Tour theme park. I invited him to come have a look at a proprietary system I was developing to help animators draw electronically for Disney's The Little Mermaid and Beauty and the Beast. That, as they say, was the beginning of a beautiful friendship.

At the time, it surprised me, and it still does, that the fine art community wasn't embracing what technology could achieve. But Tom, always a pioneer at heart, was excited from the start about trying something new. As both of our careers gradually evolved – his into fine art and mine into what I call Applied Imagination, at the intersection of technology and creativity – we occasionally collaborated on projects that were always exciting and a pleasure for us both.

When we began working on our digital paintings ten years ago, we knew there was a new frontier of fine art just waiting to be realized. Even though the technology didn't yet exist, we knew we could achieve something like Fort Mountain and Spirit Catcher – where the scene looks like an oil painting but evolves over time. So, we kept asking, "What would Rembrandt do if he had a supercomputer?" Our answer is our digital paintings.
